A GROUP of Model Farms High School students are tackling the challenging issue of social stereotyping at their school.

Social stereotyping involves making judgments about people based on superficial factors like appearance, race and gender.

The group of about 40 Year 9 students want to raise awareness of the issue and how it can impact the lives of young people, leading to low self-esteem and bullying.

They have put in place a number of initiatives to achieve this, including creating a Facebook page, school newsletter articles and posters highlighting the issue.

They will also devise lessons for Year 7 students at their school to teach them how social stereotyping can affect people’s lives.

The group of students are part of the High Resolves Leadership Program, which aims to improve leadership skills of students through hands-on social action projects. Student Sophie Beldham-Collins said they chose the subject of social stereotyping because it was a big issue at their school. “We wanted to choose something everyone could relate to,” she said. “We want to encourage people not to see others in terms of groups, but to see we are all equal.”

The group’s goal was to reach at least 300 people. To help, follow their Facebook page Discrimination Minimisation.
